Nearly everything that sixth-century Europe knew about technology came to it from Rome. Rome, however, invented few of the tools and processes it bequeathed to the Middle Ages. Roman civilization achieved a high level of culture and sophistication and left many monuments, but most of its technology ... Cathedral, Forge, and Waterwheel ...

Cathedral, Forge, and Waterwheel: Technology and Invention ...

Also Cathedral, Forge and Waterwheel puts the middle ages in a different light as it points out technologies that were developed during this time that are not recognized in other literature about this time period. I always like to learn how technology changes over time and this gives a good view of how we got to where we are now.
